QUEEN GEORGE

Ate9
DANCE COMPANY

AGAMI / RAVEH / ROTH

LOS ANGELES, CA. - Batsheva Dance Company alum Danielle Agami, artistic director of Ate9 dance company, called “one of Los Angeles’ hottest cultural commodities” (Victoria Looseleaf, FJORD Review), visits Think Tank Gallery in the historic Fashion District in Downtown Los Angeles to unveil a site-specific performance called Queen George, featuring her Ate9 dancers in an intimate and highly curated exhibition space. Agami has created a unique multi-disciplinary event, collaborating with Israeli designer and carpenter Amir Raveh for his U.S. debut (commissioned by Santa Ana Sites + Santora Building) and LA-based abstract expressionist artist Avi Roth.

Queen George will feature Ate9 dancers performing duets throughout the gallery, with private one-on-ones that break off into tiny rooms in the gallery for one dancer and one viewer. Raveh’s colorful, one-off furnishings, which incorporate workshop leftovers and remnants to create a patchwork of old and new, allow Agami to build a playground that encourages exploration of both the visitors and the dancers as they intermingle in navigating the raw venue. While Agami counters Raveh’s real-world musings with physical interactions from dancers, it is Roth’s ethereal, expressionist responses in his coffeegraps that complete this piece. Each coffeegraps® is a journey of imagination, reflection, and discovery, which begins with pigments meticulously crafted from roasted coffee and textured into abstracted works by an inventive and awe-inspiring tiltflow process.

Agami has designed a performance that absorbs these distinctive reflections challenging “normalcy” by expertly combining three separate genres to engage one another for this select engagement, providing a unique and highly curated experience.
